Goals	Whereas the "Birthing new ventures" course deepens your understanding of the pre-launch stage in the entrepreneurial process, this course aims to highlight the importance of putting entrepreneurship in context in that we go beyond the intersection of the entrepreneur and his/her opportunity. Specifically, this course aims to provide you insight into how to launch and grow a high-impact venture from a resource-based perspective. In other words, after having taken this course you should understand which resources are crucial to venture success, how to gather them, what elements to take into account when mobilizing resources as well as how you can get things done without resources.
Description	The societal impact of enterprising individuals cannot be contested. They found companies that challenge (and often replace) incumbents and they have an important role in introducing innovative products and services to new or established markets. However, entrepreneurs never operate in isolation; many entrepreneurs cofound their venture with others and establish partnerships to gather the resources necessary for launching and growing their ventures.

Literature	- e-Reader with papers - Set of teaching cases (sold by MC4E) - Each student is to select and read a biography of an entrepreneurial venture/entrepreneur
Prerequisites	The courses of the Entrepreneurship minor (see also http://maastrichtentrepreneurship.nl/minor.html) draw or the scholarly entrepreneurship literature. They do NOT expect that you have already developed an understanding of the functional domains of business administration or small business management (e.g. strategy, marketing, accounting, HRM, finance, operations). We encourage you to take the two introductory courses of the minor (Birthing new ventures and Mobilising resources [EBC2145; EBC2146]) BEFORE taking the other courses of the Minor. As this minor is delivered in English, your command of the English language in speech and writing should be good enough to actively prepare for, participate in, and contribute to the classes.
