This course serves to introduce basic perspectives on two fundamental concepts defining the features of states in emerging markets. Governance and institutions influence the policies aimed at improving the quality of human life in contemporary societies across the globe. Governance and institutions and socio-economic development are interdependent. Economic policies are shaped by multiple political factors in contemporary governance systems, and the political choices of policies affect different socio-economic areas. Therefore, it is of crucial importance to understand how different policy areas are governed and what factors shape the economic development and the evolution of specific sectors and public policies. This course introduces some fundamental concepts and theories of governance and institutions shaping emerging markets countries. We will focus on assessing the quality of governance and institutions and how to understand their role in contemporary societies. More specifically, we will introduce different approaches and tools to critically engage and understand the complex role of governance and institutions. Assessment methods: participation, presentation, research paper, written exam
